

Dimitris Siapatis is a mechanical engineer specializing in the management and optimization of internal production and distribution processes. He holds the title of Director in the Logistic Systems department at Jungheinrich Hellas - providing complete Intralogistics solutions.

Having more than twenty years of experience in this field, he mainly deals with the design of storage spaces and material handling to increase productivity and optimize warehouse processes.

He has been responsible for the total design and implementation of important supply chain and fully automated warehouse projects during his career.